

Struggling to make ends meet?

We know there are many events in life that could mean you're finding it hard to manage your money. Examples of things that can have a big impact on how much your household has to spend include:

- Losing a job,
- Health issues,
- Having a baby,
- Leaving a job to become a full-time carer.

We understand that everyone's situation is different. We also understand that talking about money worries can be hard. That's why help is available.

So, if you're having trouble making ends meet, it's important you don't ignore it or pretend it's not happening.

Take control and get back on track – it could be easier than you think

Look at how much money you have coming in and how it's being spent

Using a tool such as the online Budget Planner from MoneyHelper can help. Think about where you can save money, for example, by cancelling unused subscriptions. Prioritise things which would have the most impact on you if not paid. For example, if you're behind with rent or mortgage payments or you've court fines to pay. Then make sure you pay essential bills such as for energy and food. You can look at what money you have left and think about paying off any other outstanding debts you may have.

Talk to anyone you owe money to (your creditors)

- The sooner you ask for help, the better.
- Let them know your circumstances.
- They'll talk you through what solutions they can offer.

Ask for independent debt help and money advice

There are lots of organisations that can provide this on a free, confidential and impartial basis. Some are detailed on the back of this page. Their trained experts will help you work out which debts to pay first and talk to creditors on your behalf. They may also help you find out if you're entitled to any state benefits, or tax credits, which can help increase your income.

Be Careful: Doing nothing could make things worse

- You could end up with legal action being taken against you.
- Your debt could increase if interest and charges are added.
- Your credit rating may be affected which could make it harder for you to borrow money in the future.
